READ AND JUDGE

Secretary of Labor, Davis is working out a plan whereby all the facts regarding impending strikes will be presented to the public from an entirely disinterested point of view. Heretofore both sides to labor controversies have issued highly colored statements, each of which, taken by itself, carried conviction. It was impossible for the ordinary reader to form an unprejudiced opinion on the merits of the case. But it is the public that must bear the brunt of all the inconvenience and suffering incident to strikes, and the public is invited to know where the blame lies. Mr. Davis will supply a long needed want when he issues his unbiased statements, and the popular judgment that they will bring forth will go far toward bringing about settlements in industrial disputes.

LLOYD GEORGE SHOULD REALLY KNOW

Lloyd George, referring in a recent address on the height and fame and responsibility that he has attained said: "The higher you climb the colder it becomes and the lonelier you find it. There you are open to every blast of wind and exposed to attacks of every kind." The British premier may have found it so as the executive head of the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British dominions beyond the seas, Empire of India, etc., but we venture the assertion that President Harding does not find the atmosphere of the White House so cold and lonely. No head of any other nation in the world is closer to the people than the president of the United States. Every day he meets and shakes hands with hundreds of American citizens, who come to the White House to wish him well and congratulate him on his conduct of public affairs. He is in closest touch with the representatives of the people in the legislative branch of the government, and not a day goes by that he does not meet and discuss with them matters of legislation for the public welfare. Of course, Mr. Harding is made the object of criticism from some quarters, but he has the satisfaction of pointing to his record in reformation—a record that is being overwhelmingly endorsed whenever the people go to the polls to cast their votes.

SPREADING FALSE DOCTRINE

The spreading of false doctrine among the American people goes on apace. Complaint is made in many quarters that the schools, colleges and universities are "reeking with bolshevism." The girl's colleges are as bad as the others, and inasmuch as women have votes these institutions of learning, if wrongly employed, can work much damage. It is a cunning use of admirable traits of human nature that promotes the destructive and anti-American work of foreign propagandists in this country. They take advantage of the natural impulse of the young and uninformed to stand for better things. The youth, not realizing the difficulty and toll involved in laying the foundations of stable government, mistakes imperfections for fatal weaknesses, and confuses the frailties of persons with the defects of institutions. In a burst of genuine and commendable zeal for better things, the youth condemns what exists, and is easily brought to a temper in which he would tear down, in order, as he believes, to build better.

The old observed, the American who has studied the art of government and who loves his country with secret rather than public passion, is not deluded by the shallow reasoning of socialists and their ilk, says the Washington Post. He knows how hard it is to erect a free government that will stand. Many are the attempts that have been made through the ages, from the amphitryonic council to Mexico, and only the most conspicuously successful. The most conspicuously successful effort ever made by mankind to establish government of the people, by the people, for the people, was the founding of the United States. It remains a government strong in vitality, substantially responsive to the peoples' will, and securing equal rights, tranquility, protection, and a fair degree of prosperity. The attempts to divert the operations of the government away from the constitutional channels are always vicious in effort, even when innocent in intent. Some of these efforts are made by well-meaning college professors, students, and other persons hardly qualified by experience to improve upon the handwork of the founders and preservers of the republic.

The old rule, "Hold fast to that which is good," is deserving of some respect, even at the hands of radical college professors and their fledglings. These enthusiasts claim to be striving for good, and their hearts breathe forth slaughter against "the state of things" because they believe it to be bad. Granting that their desire is for good rather than harm, why do they not at least agree that they will hold fast to that which is universally acknowledged to be good? Before tearing down the structure of the United States to rebuild it upon a more glorious plan, they should be sure that their labors promote good rather than harm. They should be sure, also, that they are working on American plans, and not according to the crafty suggestions of anti-American propagandists.

The department of justice and other departments have information indicating that propaganda against the integrity of the United States was never more active than at present. This movement takes various forms and appeals to the unsuspecting citizen in many guises. It usually cloaks itself in patriotism. Often it appeals for a square deal to the downtrodden foreign-born in this country, the poor people of the defeated countries in particular. With patient system and with virulent hate, Americans who have been conspicuous in defending their country in congress or otherwise are marked for defeat by these propagandists. The agitation in favor of candidates who were lukewarm or pro-enemy during the war is conducted with great skill, and in many communities the citizens appear to be misled. They may be waiting, however, to express their opinion on their ballots, and they may not be so badly fooled, after all.

NATION-WIDE COMMISSION

The Republican congress has no commission to revise the tariff, declare the Democratic leaders haven't, eh? One thing that the farmers wanted most on the convening of the present congress in special session was the enactment of an emergency tariff law, and that measure was promptly put through both houses.

At its annual meeting at Buffalo, in 1917, the American Federation of Labor went on record in favor of a protective tariff, but the Democratic administration then in power refused to grant the request. The next general election saw a Republican majority elected to both houses and in 1920 there was an unprecedented Republican victory not only in the presidential contest but in the congressional and senatorial elections as well.

The farmers want a revision of the Democratic tariff, the manufacturers want it, the laboring men want it—every body wants it except the international bankers, the professors of free trade at colleges, and the Democratic leaders. Even the solid south is demanding a protective tariff.

Desperate and Insulting

Opponents of the four-power treaty were reduced to desperate straits when they gave credence to the report that the American delegate to the armaments conference had made a secret agreement not included in the terms of the treaty itself. No citizens of this country are imbued with a higher Americanism than Senators Lodge and Underwood, Secretary Hughes and Mr. Root. It did not require their denial of the charge of double-dealing to convince Americans that their every action at Washington had been above-board and dictated solely by considerations for their country's welfare.

SAM ARENTZ HONORED

Five senators and five representatives have been appointed a committee of congress to meet the transport Cambria when she arrives at New York with the last of the overseas dead of the American expeditionary forces. Congressman Arentz of Nevada was named with Representatives Crago, Fish, McSwain and Rankin as the house members of this committee, which is authorized to "represent the congress at such services and ceremonies as may be determined upon as proper and appropriate." The committee expected to leave Washington today.

LOYAL ORDER MOOSE ELECT NEW OFFICERS

The local lodge, Loyal Order of Moose, No. 974, held an interesting meeting on Tuesday night which was well attended, the occasion being the election of officers to serve for the ensuing year. The following were chosen: Dictator, Oscar Pihl; vice-dictator, Charles Toland; prelate, Charles Erickson; secretary, Fred Steen; treasurer, F. J. Hagen; inner guard, Charles Dahlin; outer guard, A. O. Anderson.

Some friends of former Governor Cox urge him as a candidate in 1924 on the ground that his record is known. That appears to be the unfortunate feature in the case of Cox.

Over in Sweden some of the economists are showing their generosity by suggesting a redistribution of the gold held in the United States.

There seems to be more worry over those who will not attend the Genoa conference than over anything that those who do attend may do.
